1988 scientists cautioned that human tinkering with the earth's climate amounted to "an unintended uncontrolled globally pervasive experiment whose assisted migration assisted colonization managed relocation translocation and rewilding of plants and animals in an era of rapid climate change" Climate Change and Migration: Security and Borders in a Warming World:

In the modern era two types of international migration have consumed our attention politically induced migration to flee war genocide and instability and migration for economic reasons. Recently though another force has generated a new wave of refugees: global warming. Climate change has altered terrains and economies throughout the tropical regions of the world from sub-Saharan Africa to Central America to South and Southeast Asia. In Climate Change and Migration In this new perspective on how global warming will impact international relations across every continent Gregory White a professor of government looks at climate induced migration from the tropical regions of the world. Focusing on refugees fleeing Africa
